

Sagan Comet

Leaving the heliosphere it's best to wear thick cables in all transit technology, stuff shielded by tantalum and maybe coffee in one hand while tuning the parabolic register that I never quite understood, anyway, but the view here is daunting and glorious, not less than almost completely black-dark with peppers from Scorpii and Cassiopeiae occasionally, and funny that Sagan once passed here, emblazoned on that gold double laserdisc thing and funny that in no time this Alcubierre rig of mine is certain to find Sagan's little boat and it's odd to consider what to do, if to leave it or let the old 70s probe wander because only lately has anyone "wondered" if one of those Voyagers will hit a restaurant or unknown mountain and who knows if the tech around the impact would know it's coming well before.

Anyway, to be continued.

I guess.
